JESUS Film Awakens Hunger for More

In the Kwanware community, a small congregation began meeting each week under the shade of a large tree. At first, only a handful of people attended. Despite church members' efforts to reach others, very few in the community showed interest—until Living Water staff arrived and showed the JESUS film.

“The movie was convicting and it really touched hearts,” said Benedict Mwini, a member of the local church in the Kwanware community.

Families began sharing with one another what they had learned and started asking questions, eager to know more about Jesus.

“Since that night, our attendance has grown to 50 people,” Benedict shared. “The work of Living Water has not only increased our numbers but has also strengthened the faith of those who were already attending. We feel inspired to grow spiritually and share the message of Jesus with others in the community.”

Today, Benedict and the congregation look ahead with hope for the future of their church. They are grateful for the impact that Living Water has had on their community in such a short time and hope that others in the Kwanware community will continue to join them.

Residents of the Kwanware community gather each week for church services under this tree, growing in their faith together.
